He may remind you of the old Four on the Floor comedy sketch "Mr. Canoehead," but Andrew Metcalfe is on a real-life and very serious quest: raising money for breast-cancer research as he portages his pink canoe across Ontario. Wildlife service, city at odds over Lansdowne Park tree removal

Showdown. Residents plan rally to keep construction crews from felling more trees

A showdown is expected early Monday morning between concerned Glebe residents and construction crews hired to remove more trees along Holmwood Avenue. There's also a confrontation brewing between the city and the Canadian Wildlife Service.

Martha McKeen, a woman who chained her bike to a backhoe on Tuesday to protest the unannounced removal of about a dozen trees in front of her home, helped organize a rally to stop the city from cutting the 60 remaining trees in Lansdowne Park.

She said she and other residents are concerned about birds nesting in the trees and that the city will be breaking federal laws if the clearing goes ahead. In an email obtained by Metro, a Canadian Wildlife Service manager said cutting down the trees would contravene the Migratory Bird Convention Act 1994. They intend to send two wildlife officers to ensure the city complies with the regulations.

However, in a post on his website, Capital Ward Coun. David Chernushenko said the city initiated its own independent nesting assessment in response to concerns from citizens about the bird nests.

There are no restrictions on tree removal as a result of breeding-bird nesting, the post said. He said the tree removal will go ahead at 7 a.m. Monday.

"We're going to be there to see if the city makes the ethical decision or whether they disregard their own federal laws," said McKeen. JOE LOFARO/METRO

Keep interprovincial bridge out of Greenbelt, group warns

Two new proposed routes criticized. Group says east-end residents should go to public consultation to learn about impact proposed bridge would have on their communities

NOURAN ABDELLATIF
ottawa@metronews.ca

Some east-end residents are opposing "once and for all" a new bridge between Ottawa and Gatineau that could cut through the Greenbelt.

Members of Common Sense Crossings (CSC) say they will send that message to the National Capital Commission at a public consultation Tuesday, when they plan to tell the commission to stick to its original plan to have the bridge go through Kettle Island.

Two new proposed routes — one running through Lower Duck Island and the second through ecologically sensitive McLaurin Bay — will damage the Greenbelt, be more expensive than the Kettle Island route, and will increase traffic, the group says.

"We're convinced the decision (about where to put the bridge) isn't going to be made based on solid data," said Lorna Lyttle, a director with CSC.

Lyttle says the NCC's report on traffic origin and destination is incomplete. The new options would direct about 2,700 trucks onto the 174 highway, creating congestion, she said. She said she had hoped the NCC would co-ordinate its traffic studies with the city of Ottawa's LRT reports.

Pink-canoe portage raising money to fight breast cancer

If you see a man with a pink canoe on his head miles away from water, don't worry, he's not lost — he's just on a portage across Ontario to raise money to fight breast cancer.

"Every day I walk until I reach my goal — 20 or 30 kilometres — and then I set up camp in an area where I won't get kicked off of, or that I have permission to stay," said Andrew Metcalfe at a pit stop at a McDonald's on Carling Avenue Sunday.

He began June 3 in Kingston and walked across Ottawa last weekend. He plans to walk south to Belleville and then all the way to Windsor.

Metcalfe was six when his mom was fighting breast cancer and the Canadian Cancer Society offered a lot of help to the family. Fifteen years later, she's still in remission and it's time for him to give something back, he said.

"Cancer runs in my family, primarily breast cancer; my mom's had breast cancer, my grandma had breast cancer and my aunt, unfortunately, passed away from it," he said.

So far, he has raised about $2,500, and all the proceeds raised through his website pinkportage.com go to the Canadian Cancer Society.

Tradition upheld as Little Italy evolves

Spirit alive. Preston Street is changing but it's still a gathering place for Ottawa's Italian community, residents say

JESSICA SMITH
jessica.smith@metronews.ca

Girls celebrate their first-communion walk during the Feast of Saint Anthony Procession on Preston Street. JESSICA SMITH/METRO

As girls paraded down in white communion dresses and soccer fans watched the Italy-Spain match inside bars and restaurants, Preston Street was packed with people celebrating Italian Week on Sunday.

The neighbourhood is benefiting from its own "economic boom," which is drawing in people and investors, said manager of Giovanni's Restaurant Tony Cafaro, while watching the Euro 2012 match and occasionally interrupting himself to yell at the TV in Italian.

"Italians and other immigrants — we came here with nothing and we worked our way up with the skills we were born with and taught," he said. "It was a small community and it got bigger and bigger, and voila."

Development in the area is a sign that investors see a future in Little Italy, he said.

"They want somewhere that's well established, good for the family, good for business, so they made a decision to throw a lot of projects here in Little Italy and around the area because it's busy," Cafaro said.

"They see a lot of economic boom here and so they're building condos, maybe some boutiques, some other styles or restaurants or coffee shops."

The area is more diverse than is used to be, but it's still a gathering place for Italians from across Ottawa, said Stefania Trombetti, as she watched marchers in the Feast of Saint Anthony Procession make their way down Preston Street.

She said the parade was a little smaller this year, possibly because people were watching the soccer game, but also because the original participants, including those in the army regiments, are dwindling in number.

"My grandfather used to be in it, but as people pass away the original generation gets smaller and smaller," she said. "It's up to us to keep it up."

Members of Ottawa's Italian community march past a multi-storey building that has brought new office workers, new businesses and more traffic to Preston Street. JESSICA SMITH/METRO

Arboretum Festival: A mix of music, food, art ... and camping

You won't find that many trees at Ottawa's inaugural Arboretum Festival in September, but organizers are hoping to raise enough funds to transform next year's event into an all-out camping festival.

The 2012 Arboretum Festival is a celebration of "unrepresented" music that ties in with local food and art, according to the festival's proponents, friends Rolf Klausener and Marlene Power.

Their goal is to raise the event's profile enough so that in 2013, they can throw a "world-class, camping-inclusive, boutique music and arts festival."

They set up arboretumfestival.com to raise $15,000 to cover the cost of permits and renting stages for the Sept. 15 event in the courtyard outside the Ottawa Jail Hostel.

It was while touring in Europe from 2008 to 2010 with his band The Acorn that Klausener was exposed to the idea of festival-goers surrounded by nature and enjoying shows, food, and art.

The musical linuep includes Andrew Vincent, Adam Saikaley and Pregnancy Scares.

There will be on-site food carts from local restaurants such as The Wellington Gastro Pub, Art-Is-In Bakery and The Whalesbone Oyster House. JOE LOFARO/METRO

Montreal subway keeps running despite Grand Prix disruption threat

Student uprising.
Police criticized for 'preventative' measures that kept potential protesters away from race site on island

Montreal police clamped down on any attempt to disrupt the subway line running to the city's Formula One Grand Prix race Sunday, arresting 34 people and forcing dozens more from the off-shore island where the race was held.

There were no major incidents despite plans by an anti-capitalist group — and promoted on a student association website — to disrupt the subway line that shuttled thousands of fans to the Circuit Gilles-Villeneuve.

Officers were posted at throughout the subway system, with sniffer dogs and a line of police at the station only steps from the track.

But police were criticized for searches and arrests that police called "a preventive measure."

"Some of those arrested were people police recognized from earlier student demonstrations that had been deemed illegal," district commander Alain Simoneau told reporters. "In the interest of public safety, we decided to detain these people."

Masks, rocks and knives were among the objects seized. Most of those arrested will be released without charge, while others arrested in neighbouring suburbs could be charged, Simoneau said.

Police presence was high leading up to the race. A Canadian Press reporter who didn't have a Grand Prix ticket wasn't allowed onto the island where the race is being held and was instead forced back onto the subway along with several other people.

Several people, many of them wearing red squares, the emblem of the student movement, were seen being forcibly escorted back onto the subway by police.

One young woman in tears said she was planning to get her ticket when she met up with a friend in front of the track. The woman, who had dyed red hair, accused the police of "profiling." Police said about 40 people were forced back in all.

An Ottawa man headed to the race said he felt the police had an obligation to ensure the event went off smoothly. He said while he supports the right to protest, disrupting the transit system was out of line.

"It should be a peaceful event," said Ali Fadelalla. "Lots of tourists come from all over the world. If people start to disrupt the race it's not good for the country or the province."

There has been a heightened police presence throughout the four-day Grand Prix festivities in downtown Montreal and at the racetrack itself. The event has become the target of demonstrations against student tuition fee increases and capitalism in general.

Alberta spill

Oil wasn't flowing at time of leak: Pipeline company

A representative for the company whose pipeline spilled hundreds of thousands of litres of oil into an Alberta river suggests there were two lucky breaks that kept it from being worse.

Stephen Bart, the vice-president of crude-oil operations for Plains Midstream Canada, says the first piece of good luck was that the pipeline wasn't flowing at the time. Bart says the second was that the Red Deer River was swollen with recent rain, and that washed the oil to the Gleniffer Reservoir where it can be more easily contained by booms. Plains Midstream Canada estimates that between 1,000 and 3,000 barrels of oil spilled Thursday.

Bart says people are on foot looking for wildlife that may have been affected by the spill, but there are few reports of injured animals so far. The company has been providing bottled water to people who draw their drinking water directly from the river and the reservoir. THE CANADIAN PRESS

Budget. Potential for long week as Speaker set to rule on stall tactics

Opposition politicians throwing hundreds of amendments at the Conservatives' omnibus budget bill are set to find out which ones are going to stick.

What could be a marathon week in the House of Commons begins Monday with the Speaker expected to decide how over 1,000 changes proposed to Bill C-38, the government's budget implementation bill, will be dealt with in the House.

The government argues all legislation contained within the bill is to the economic benefit of the country, but critics say jamming so many major changes into a single bill means they aren't getting the scrutiny they require.

But with a Conservative majority, the bill is set to pass, so all the Opposition parties have pulled procedural rabbits of their hats.

The New Democrats and the Liberals gave notice of over 1,000 amendments seeking to delete various clauses of the bill. Technically, a vote is required on each one, which could keep the Commons sitting around the clock for days.

Really big bill

The 400-plus pages of legislation amends some 70 laws, including the process for environmental assessment and the rules around old age security and Employment Insurance.

"The content is flawed in many respects and they just want to bulldoze through the whole process," said NDP deputy finance critic Guy Caron.

Both parties had also suggested changes at the committee studying the bill, but those were rejected by the Tories.

On Monday, the Liberals will try anew, asking that elements relating to fisheries, environmental assessment, EI and old age security be removed and introduced as separate legislation.

Conservative House Leader Peter Van Loan suggested the government may look at some of the proposed changes, but argued the lion's share are merely procedural games.

Forgiveness wasn't easy for woman in iconic Vietnam pic

Hatred. Bombing changed view of the war, and left her scarred for life

A woman who came to symbolize the horrors of the Vietnam War said she thought she would "die of hatred" after the bombing that left her scarred for life.

Though she eventually learned to forgive those behind the attack — and the brutal conflict that spurred it — Kim Phuc Phan Thi vowed she would never forget the terrible consequences of war.

That she survived the raid was "an accident of history," she said on the 40th anniversary of the photo that made her famous.

Quoted

"A moment captured on film turned one child's atrocity into a story of hope and survival."

Kim Phuc Phan Thi
On the photo that changed her life

"I'll never forget my two cousins who were killed in that napalm fire and I'll never forget the millions of innocent victims who live their lives with the daily threat of violence and war," she said.

Kim Phuc was only nine years old when she was photographed fleeing a napalm strike on her village in South Vietnam on June 8, 1972.

The image of her running naked down a road captured worldwide attention and later won a Pulitzer Prize.

Recovering from the physical and emotional wounds she suffered took years, Kim Phuc said, thanking the journalists, nurses, doctors and loved ones who came to her aid in the decades since the bombing.

"In order to be really free, I had to learn to forgive," she said in an emotional speech punctuated by tears.

Kim Phuc and her husband came to Canada in 1992 and now live in the Toronto area.

Mourning as protest

Egypt government pulls xenophobic ads

TV spots. Public-service announcements, called 'deceptive' by one activist, encourage suspicion of foreigners

A video image from an Egyptian public-service announcement reads: "Every word has a price, one word can save a nation." EGYPTIAN STATE TV/THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

Egypt's government has pulled TV public-service announcements that warned against talking to foreigners because they might be spies, after critics charged the spots fuelled xenophobia and aimed to tarnish those behind last year's uprising.

The two spots ran on state and private television stations for a few days before Minister of Information Ahmed Anis ordered them off the air, a media official said Sunday.

One opens with a blond-haired young man scanning a café while a narrator says:

"From the beginning, he knows why he is here and sets up his goal. He won't have to spend much time getting to know the people in the place." The foreigner then spots three young Egyptians and heads over to them, saying in broken Arabic: "I love you so much." The narrator says: "Our generosity has no limits," as one of the Egyptians stands up, shakes hands and invites the foreigner to sit with them.

It goes on to show the visitor smiling slyly and narrowing his eyes while listening intently to the Egyptians complaining about the economy and talking about overhearing a plot against the ruling military council. The narrator warns Egyptians not to share with outsiders their woes about the economy or political situation.

Both spots close with: "Every word comes with a price. A word can save a nation."

Claims of a "meddling foreign hand" found resonance among many Egyptians during and after the uprising, even while the revolt was driven by youthful activists.

Some among the public have mixed feelings about foreigners. At the same time, they worry about losing the country's main source of income, tourism. THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

Mubarak's health 'in decline'

Hosni Mubarak is slipping in and out of consciousness eight days after the ousted Egyptian leader was sent to prison to begin serving a life sentence, a security official said on Sunday.

With rumours of the former president's death spreading rapidly, authorities granted his wife, former first lady Suzanne Mubarak, and the couple's two daughters-in-law special permission to visit him in Cairo's Torah prison early that morning.

"The former president's health is in decline, but now it's stable in its deteriorated state," the official said. Since his wife's visit, Mubarak has suffered from an irregular heartbeat and required assistance in breathing.

The official said that the former president now lives only on liquids and yogurt. He spoke on condition of anonymity because he was not authorized to speak to the media. THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

Syrian opposition group selects secular Kurd leader

Syrian National Council. International community looks to cohesive party to mobilize and oust President Bashar Assad

Syria's main opposition group on Sunday picked a secular Kurd as its new leader after criticism that the former head was too autocratic and the group was becoming dominated by Islamists.

The opposition, hobbled by disorganization and infighting, is trying to pull together and appear more inclusive by choosing a member of an ethnic minority.

The opposition's disarray has frustrated Western powers eager to dislodge Syrian President Bashar Assad but unwilling, or unable, to send in their own forces to do it. There has been some willingness to support the rebels with funds and arms, but the lack of a cohesive front or a single address has hampered the efforts as the bloodshed intensifies.

On Sunday, government forces shelled rebel-held cities and villages, killing at least 38 people in the rebellious Homs district in central Syria, activists said. It was impossible to independently confirm the death toll.

The UN's latest estimate, dating back to April, was that 9,000 people had died in the 15-month conflict. The UN has been unable to update the figure since. Syrian activists put the toll at more than 13,000.

The choice of Abdulbaset Sieda as head of the Syrian National Council is aimed at achieving several goals for the main opposition group.

1. Under outgoing leader Burhan Ghalioun, criticism mounted that the group was dominated by Islamists, especially the Muslim Brotherhood. Seida is a secular.

2. Sieda is also a Kurd, and his selection could be an incentive for Syria's minority Kurds to take a more active role in the uprising. Up to now they have stayed mostly on the sidelines.

3. Selection of a member of a minority group could counter criticism that, under Ghalioun, the umbrella organization was too autocratic. Sieda is seen as a neutral consensus figure.

"This is clearly an opportunity and there is clearly a need for a change," said Peter Harling of the International Crisis Group think-tank.

The SNC must also gain the confidence of the international community, which is searching for effective ways to hasten the departure of Assad.

Increasing instability

British consider Syria intervention

British Foreign Secretary William Hague said Sunday that he couldn't rule out a military intervention in Syria, saying the situation there was beginning to resemble the violence that gripped Bosnia in the 1990s.

Hague told Sky News television that time was now "clearly running short" to implement international envoy Kofi Annan's cease-fire plan in Syria, and that Britain was already turning its eye toward what it would do if the plan failed.

Attacks on Christian churches rock Nigeria

Sectarian violence.
Suicide car bomber, gunman kill six and wound more than 40 as radical group claims responsibility

A suicide car bomber detonated his explosives Sunday outside a church in central Nigeria as gunmen attacked another church in the nation's northeast, killing at least six people and wounding dozens of others in the latest attacks targeting Christian worshippers in a nation that is increasingly divided by faith, officials and witnesses said.

A radical Islamist sect known as Boko Haram claimed responsibility for the attacks.

The violence Sunday in hard-hit northeastern Borno state comes as almost every weekend this year has seen churches targeted by Boko Haram and other shadowy assailants, exacerbating the country's unease.

After the attack, angry youths surrounded the area, striking out at Muslims. In addition to those killed, more than 40 others were wounded. THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

Factions

Nigeria, a nation of more than 160 million, is divided between a largely Muslim north and Christian south.

- Boko Haram attacks have inflamed tensions between the two religions, though many in both faiths live peacefully with each other and intermarry in Africa's most populous nation.
- Churches across the country now receive additional military and police protection, and they use metal-detecting wands to check worshippers. Churches encourage women to leave their purses at home.

Earthquake shakes Isle of Rhodes and parts of Turkey

A powerful earthquake shook the Greek island of Rhodes and southwestern Turkey on Sunday. There were no reports of deaths or serious damage, but officials said six people were hurt in Turkey by jumping out of buildings.

The Athens Geodynamic Institute says the quake, whose preliminary magnitude was 5.8, struck at a depth of 37 kilometres in the Aegean Sea on Sunday. It struck between the Greek island of Rhodes and western Turkey.

Turkey's Kandilli Observatory gave a stronger preliminary magnitude of 6.0, with aftershocks.

Areas of Turkey shaken by the quake included the resort town of Oludeniz, the Aegean port of Izmir, and the city of Antalya. Police in Rhodes said there were no injuries. THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

Apple. New iPhone, iPad software anticipated

Apple CEO Tim Cook is expected to show off new iPhone software, updated Mac computers and provide more details on future releases of Mac software when he kicks off the company's annual conference for software developers on Monday.

The announcement of new software for the iPhone, iPad and iPod Touch has been confirmed by banners that appeared at the Moscone conference centre in San Francisco on Friday, reading "iOS 6."

Apple has for the past few years used its Worldwide Developers Conference as an opportunity to announce new iPhone software.

What's not known is what new features will come with iOS 6, or when it will be released to consumers. Usually, the new software becomes available for download around the time a new iPhone model appears.

Apple-watchers expect the next version of the iPhone, the iPhone 5, to appear this fall, about a year after the launch of the 4S model.

In 2010, Apple demonstrated the new iPhone 4 at the WWDC, but analysts don't expect the company to show off a phone model this year.

With the launch of iOS 5 last year, Apple added many features already found in competing smartphone software. It also added the "Siri" virtual-assistant feature, which interprets voice commands and talks back to the user.

This year, there are fewer "catch-up" features to add, so Apple watchers expect more modest improvements.

Some speculate that Facebook could become more tightly integrated, in much the same way that Apple baked Twitter functions into its software last year.

That could make it easier to post Facebook status updates from within Apple's apps.

On the Mac software side, there are fewer unknowns. Apple already demonstrated most of the features of OS X 10.8 "Mountain Lion" in February and said it will go on sale late this summer.

It's all downhill from here despite bailout: Spain PM

Debt crisis. Spain becomes the fourth and largest country to ask eurogroup to rescue its failing banks

Spain's grinding economic misery will get worse this year, despite the country's request for a European financial lifeline of up to $125 billion US to save its banks, Prime Minister Mariano Rajoy said Sunday.

A day after the country conceded it needed outside help following months of denying it would seek assistance, Rajoy said more Spaniards will lose their jobs in a country where one out of every four are already unemployed.

"This year is going to be a bad one," Rajoy said Sunday in his first comments about the rescue since it was announced the previous evening by his economy minister.

The conservative prime minister added that the economy, stuck in its second recession in three years, will still contract the previously predicted 1.7 per cent even with the help.

Spain on Saturday became the fourth — and largest — of the 17 countries that use Europe's common currency to request a bailout — a big blow to a nation that a few years ago took pride as the continent's economic superstar only to see it become the hot spot in the eurozone debt crisis. Its economy is the eurozone's fourth largest after Germany, France and Italy.

Although Spain has not yet said how much money it would seek, the eurogroup — finance ministers of the 17-country eurozone — said in a statement Saturday that it was prepared to lend up to $125 billion.

Charity auction

Lunch with Buffett nets $3.5 million

The cost to dine with investor Warren Buffett has apparently spiked in value, with one deep-pocketed bidder forking over nearly $3.5 million during a charity auction Friday night.

The annual auction for a private lunch with the Nebraska billionaire closed following a flurry of activity in the final hours. In the end, the highest bid was a record-breaking $3,456,789.

The auction benefits the Glide Foundation, which helps the homeless in San Francisco. Buffett has raised more than $11.5 million for the group in 13 past auctions. The event provides a significant portion of Glide's roughly $17-million annual budget that pays for social services to the poor and homeless.

"We just had a most amazing, shocking experience occur in our great city," Glide's founder, the Rev. Cecil Williams, said in a statement Friday night. "We are shouting, dancing, rejoicing and celebrating."

The organization said Friday's winning bidder wished to remain anonymous.

Doctors defy technophobe image with texts, tweets

There's a stereotype that says doctors shun technology that might threaten patients' privacy and their own pocketbooks.

But a new breed of physicians are texting health messages to patients, tracking disease trends on Twitter, identifying medical problems on Facebook pages and communicating with patients through email.

So far, those numbers are small. Many doctors still cling to pen and paper, and are most comfortable using e-technology to communicate with each other — not with patients. But from the nation's top public health agency, to medical clinics in the heartland, some physicians realize patients want more than a 15-minute office visit and callback at the end of the day. Far from Silicon Valley and East Coast high-tech hubs, Kansas City pediatrician Natasha Burgert offers child-rearing tips on her blog, Facebook and Twitter pages, and answers patients' questions by email and text messages.

"These tools are embedded in my work day," Burgert said. "This is something I do in between checkups. It's much easier for me to shoot you an email and show you a blog post than it is to phone you back. That's what old-school physicians are going to be doing, spending an hour at the end of the day" returning patients' phone calls, she said. THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

GETTING YOU THERE ... EVENTUALLY

URBAN COMPASS
Steve Collins
ottawa@metronews.ca

OC Transpo riders who thought they had wasted their last hours of lining up for new bus passes this month will get to relive the experience at least once more in July, as the bright future of transit is once again running a little behind schedule.

The preliminary rollout of the Presto smart-card system did not go as well as hoped, delaying the full launch, which had been set for July 1. (Or, looking at it more positively, the test worked perfectly, revealing serious problems with on-board card readers before they started mucking things up system-wide.)

... and Presto!

If the announcement was a disappointment, it should only have been the mildest of surprises.

If the announcement was a disappointment, it should only have been the mildest of surprises. Presto, after all, was also expected online in 2010, and missed another scheduled launch in March. Now, with July 1 joining the ranks of these aborted dates, and August 1 being presented as the new fingers-crossed target, further delays, if and when they come, should not be shocking, either.

The limited test run of Presto that began last month was prudent, given the track record of other recent major upgrades to the transit system.

We went through a similar series of false starts on real-time bus tracking via GPS. That saga probably reached its goofiest stage last year when the raw data was released to app developers and then abruptly unreleased. It was easy enough to wonder whether Transpo was simply nervous about giving riders excessively detailed information on just how late their buses actually are, and how often.

The Smart Bus system, originally inspired by a visually-impaired passenger's complaint that drivers weren't verbally calling out stops, started out with a budget of $6 million that soon bloated to $17 million.

Eventually, though, it too came online, and seems to work well, though it was on the blink during one recent trip I took, not even displaying a route number for the benefit of boarding passengers. The driver, after assuring rider after rider they were indeed on the right bus, slyly pointed up at the blank monitor and grinned, "Seventeen million, eh?"

Riders have come to expect a few hitches and glitches any time Transpo tries something new, and so these latest difficulties shouldn't be any cause for alarm. Through a litany of technical and procurement difficulties, OC Transpo has stuck steadfastly to what I consider its unofficial motto, "We'll get you there … eventually."

The delay, however, gives more ammunition to Presto's critics, who were already well supplied with gripes about how our provincial funding deal for adopting the technology was inferior to Toronto's. Plus, the sole-sourcing of the contract was scoffed at by those who pointed out that similar systems were available, cheaper, from other companies.

The provincial government invested heavily in the development of Presto, and leaned fairly hard on Ottawa to pick it up, agreeing to pick up part of the tab and making $32.5 million in transit funding from gas taxes contingent on getting on board with Presto. That made it hard to say no.

OC Transpo, in turn, is leaning on its customers to use Presto. While we'll have to wait a little longer for the promised simplicity and convenience of smart-card-driven transit, at least one part of the plan will go ahead right on schedule: higher fares.

This year's July 1 fare hikes to the most expensive bus ride in Canada seem designed to wean riders off the bus ticket, the price of which will jump 15.4 per cent, practically eliminating the savings compared to a cash fare. Alternately, as the upbeat blurb on Transpo's website puts it, you could "save with PRESTO — the price-per-ride is less than using cash or tickets. Seniors pay even less!"

But there is no Presto, and hence no savings. Transpo now assures us: "In July, OC Transpo customers will continue to use regular paper bus passes, tickets or cash as they have in the past."

Except they'll pay more. So, sorry, the carrot isn't ready yet, but, while you wait, please enjoy another helping of stick.

Something's fishy about this ...

Pedicure shops set foot in Iraq

An Iraqi man immerses his feet in a fish tank with Garra rufa, also known as doctor fish, at Baghdad's first fish-pedicure salon in Iraq on Sunday. The latest luxury spa in Iraq's capital offers another small sign of life creeping closer to normalcy, if your definition of "normal" includes having tiny fish nibble on your feet.

The salon aims to bring in Iraqi customers who have recently begun to venture out again as the violence that engulfed the country after the 2003 U.S.-led invasion ebbs.

Spa located near security checkpoint

Violence in Baghdad has dropped sharply in recent years, after a wave of sectarian attacks that pushed the country to the brink of civil war. The wealthy Mansour neighbourhood near Musbah Saleh's spa saw some of the worst of the sectarian carnage.

Just down the street from Doctor's Fish Spa, there is a police checkpoint — one of dozens across Baghdad — with concrete barriers, rolls of barbed wire and armed police. Far from scaring customers off, the checkpoint was part of the location's appeal, Saleh says. THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

Metric find their system

New album. Band parlays their success into making music on their own terms — and gets experimental on Synthetica

TABASSUM SIDDIQUI
scene@metronews.ca

It's a well-worn cliché: emerging indie band with big buzz but few resources faces umpteen struggles along the way before finally breaking through and becoming a bona fide international success.

But despite their steady rise, Metric have always refused to take the expected route — while other bands in their position may have succumbed to the pressures that go hand-in-hand with crossing over into the mainstream, they decided to leverage their success a slightly different way — by making their next album entirely on their own terms.

The band's new record, Synthetica, offers a sleek digital-meets-analogue twist on the quartet's signature synth-pop — fans looking for a repeat of the shiny stadium anthems of 2009's Fantasies (which sold over 1 million singles and nearly 500,000 copies worldwide) might be slightly nonplussed, but to hear singer Emily Haines tell it, success equalled more creative freedom.

"You have to really have it together on all fronts," she notes.

"It's pretty challenging to navigate the business side and the sonic side — the music you want to create, who you want to work with, the live element. So it feels like we've slowly but surely made progress in all those areas over the years, and it feels good to be heading in the direction we always hoped to."

Aside from releasing their music entirely independently through their own label via various international partnerships, another piece of the puzzle was establishing their own studio at home in Toronto — being able to hunker down amidst guitarist-producer Jimmy Shaw's growing arsenal of vintage gear and instruments proved to be the key catalyst in defining Synthetica's sound.

"It's interesting with those instruments, because when they were invented, they were associated with the future. And now here we are in the supposed future, and those instruments actually sound really charming — they don't sound alien at all."

From the robotic stomp of first single Youth Without Youth (which quickly became the first single to ever debut at No. 1 on the Canadian Mediabase alternative radio chart) to the buzzy synths propelling surefire hit The Void, Synthetica paints a portrait of a modern era too preoccupied with keeping up than it is with taking stock.

"It's our examination of what's real and what's artificial," Haines explains.

"So it's a lot about looking back to look forward — it's not really so much about reminiscing as trying to get a handle on things so you can figure out which direction to take."

Mapping out their own route — literally and figuratively — will be a major part of Metric's preoccupations over the next year as the band hits the road across the globe in support of the new album ("You'd laugh if you saw the giant wall calendar that is our lives right now," Haines quips) while also managing the responsibilities that come with being in charge of their own creative and business interests.

"We seem to be living in exponential times, where things are changing so rapidly — obviously not just in music, but in all sectors of technology," Haines says. "It's sort of more fun to be on the side where we're on, where we can be in the moment and try and experiment with things that haven't been done before, as opposed to trying to hold on to the way things used to be.

"But we're up for the whole thing — we feel like we're doing exactly what we're meant to do."

100 episodes later, Robot Chicken is still going strong

An unlikely hit. Seth Green surprised his hilarious 'side project' is now on its sixth season

Seth Green THE CANADIAN PRESS

When Seth Green launched Robot Chicken back in 2005, he thought the same thing most viewers likely did — that the scattershot animated gag machine was a fun diversion destined for a TV lifespan not much longer than one of its pithy sketches.

So with the 100th episode of the Emmy-winning trouble-making-with-toys comedy set to air on Teletoon this Sunday night, the 38-year-old is as surprised as anyone by the manic show's longevity.

"It's super surreal," marvelled the upbeat Green in a recent telephone interview.

"Because this was just never meant to be something that actually was a show, let alone a series, let alone a long-running series. This was such a side project. This was such a silly thing that we wanted to make.

"It evolved into something that other people were watching, and so we realized we were making it for all of us."

The stop-motion sketch series arrived in February 2005. Grown from a short-lived web series produced by Green and Robot Chicken co-creator Matthew Senreich, the show was aired on Adult Swim before that property became a cross-platform cartoon titan producing TV shows, video games and music.

Back then, it wasn't even its own network, but just a programming block on the Cartoon Network.

"We didn't expect anything," said Green. "Adult Swim was really just taking shape. We weren't even sure if the network was going to be around in a couple months.

"And we had no idea what we were doing," he added, noting that the show's producers initially took on an overly ambitious production schedule. "I actually had a physical breakdown toward the end of that year."

With Robot Chicken, Green and Senreich let their childhood obsession with toys fuel a rapid-fire melange of imaginatively bawdy jokes steeped in geek culture — one sketch of thousands, for instance, depicts a Star Wars stormtrooper bringing his poor daughter onto the Death Star during "take your kids to work day."

Over five seasons, the show has welcomed a stunning array of Hollywood A-listers into its cracked world, including Sarah Michelle Gellar, Mila Kunis, Snoop Dogg, Megan Fox, Scarlett Johansson, Conan O'Brien, Ryan Seacrest and Charlize Theron.

But perhaps the biggest boon to the show's fortune was timing. Less than a week before Robot Chicken hit the airwaves, YouTube launched and suddenly seized upon and furthered the Internet's collectively voracious desire for short-form content. And Robot Chicken's snickering snippets were the perfect fit.

It was a coincidence that looked like prescience, Green says.

"Isn't that weird? It makes us look like we really knew what the hell what we were talking about," he said with a laugh.

"No, we just didn't have money to shoot anything longer than four minutes, so we developed rapid-fire short-term content.

"When Robot Chicken came around, we originally called it ADD TV, because we thought that was what it was — it was jokes without a laborious setup, all punch lines. It's straight to the point."

Green and his collaborators are currently in the process of piecing together the sixth season of the show (which airs earlier in the U.S. than it does here in Canada), although he's focusing his effort on directing a one-time Robot Chicken special set in the DC Comics universe.

Television. Gilmore Girls creator welcomes comparisons to new show Bunheads

Fans of the well-loved mother-daughter dramedy Gilmore Girls may get a sense of déjà vu when tuning into creator Amy Sherman-Palladino's new show Bunheads.

There's the crackerjack dialogue delivered at breakneck pace, the languidly winsome acoustic music and an idyllic small-town crammed with lovably unique oddballs. And at the centre of it all, there's a corrosively clever, leggy brunette occasionally butting heads with a matriarch played by Gilmore vet Kelly Bishop.

While Sherman-Palladino emphasizes the differences between the two shows, she agrees that such comparisons don't exactly ring hollow.

"I would be kind of a moron if I thought that automatically there were not going to be any comparisons between this show and Gilmore," said Sherman-Palladino in a telephone interview from her home in California this week. "I have a very specific style of writing ... and directing and producing a show.

"I don't want to do the show of long looks ... and a lot of dramatic scoring in the background while the heroine in her billowing skirts walks slowly — I will have already hung myself from a shower rod if I was doing a show like that," she added.

"I like snap, I like pace, I like energy, I like a lot of comedy in my dramas.... My hope is that Gilmore fans will find enough things that they enjoyed about Gilmore that they can bring to this, and yet sort of new fun relationships to get invested in."

"If you're not into the ballet thing ... you're still going to find plenty to hook into on this show."
Creator Amy Sherman-Palladino

And with due respect to the comfort-TV nirvana provided by the seven-season run of Gilmore Girls, Sherman-Palladino's new show seems to have come from an equally personal place.

The show — which premieres Monday on ABC Spark — revolves around Michelle Simms (played by two-time Tony winner Sutton Foster), a classically trained prima ballerina now firmly entrenched in a rut as a Las Vegas showgirl considered too old for meatier theatrical roles. On a whim, she impulsively marries an adoring stranger (played with hangdog sweetness by the perfectly cast Alan Ruck) and moves to his sleepy coastal town.

There, she butts heads with his close-at-hand mother-in-law, Fanny Flowers (Bishop), but bonds with the four young charges at the dance school Fanny runs from the house they now share.

Perry keeps it professional

With her marriage to Russell Brand falling apart, Katy Perry learned how to keep her personal problems backstage while touring last year, she explains to Graham Norton in an interview.

"I love being onstage, and even though I went through some pretty tough times last year, I had to separate that because I know my problems are my problems and they are not the audience's problems," Perry says.

"They are here to see a show and to be entertained, so I got on that lift, put a smile on my face and went up (onstage) with my t–s spinning." After her interview, Perry was spotted grabbing dinner with Florence + the Machine guitarist Robert Ackroyd, with whom she'd supposedly split up last month.

Madonna has never been one to put on a PG show, but her Thursday night concert in Istanbul made rolling around moaning in a wedding dress look subtle.

While performing her song Human Nature, the 53-year-old — wearing some combination of fishnets and upscale suburban mall bondage — decided that fondling herself wasn't quite enough.

At the end of perhaps the world's most choreographed, awkward striptease, the singer flashed the audience of 55,000 her right nipple before ending the song with her hand down her pants.

Is she still sexy?

Of course. But she's now officially in the creepy aunt subsection.

Lindsay Lohan's car crash still happening

MONICA WEYMOUTH
scene@metronews.ca

Lindsay Lohan got into a nasty car accident in L.A. over the weekend, and because this is Lindsay Lohan, things are far from over.

The actress, who was driving, initially claimed that an 18-wheeler cut off her black Porsche, causing her to slam into the back of it and total her car.

We're not sure if the damage matches up to this story — we're not even sure we've ever seen a Porsche in one piece — but the driver of the truck tells TMZ that Lohan, who was speeding, caused the crash, then attempted to leave the scene while her assistants negotiated a bribe and removed the actress' belongings from the car.

"I'd already called 911 because they were trying to get away from the scene," the truck driver tells the site. "But they packed a bag and then the (assistant) told me, 'Don't mention the bag to the cops.'"

Lindsay, for her part, is sticking with her original story, but yesterday also floated the idea that the brakes on the Porsche, which was a rental, were recently replaced and failed. Lindsay, we realize you didn't have a normal adolescence, so allow us to explain how this works: When you irresponsibly smash up an expensive car that isn't yours, the correct response is to cry, call your mom and say "officer" a lot.

Rinse and repeat as necessary.

Snooki. ALL PHOTOS GETTY IMAGES

Warning: Nude Snooki is lurking out there

Jersey Shore star Snooki seems to be the latest celebrity to get her phone hacked and, surprise, there were nude photos on there.

The pictures, which were first posted to the blog Egotastic, show her — or, if we're entertaining a really dark world, an impersonator — in a hotel room and appear to be at least six months old.

We can't decide what's more upsetting: That we've seen Snooki naked, or that we can estimate how long ago she was naked.

Angelina attached to Fifty Shades adaptation?

The breakout erotic novel Fifty Shades of Grey may have found yet another fan with Angelina Jolie, who has reportedly been in talks to direct the film adaptation, according to Deadline.

Sources say Jolie has had "a conversation or two" with Universal Pictures, the studio that won the rights to the smash book, though a source close to Jolie denies the story, saying Jolie is "completely focused on her next film, Maleficent, and isn't entertaining other offers at this moment."

Marijuana more popular than smokes

A U.S. government survey shows more teens are now smoking pot than cigarettes.

The Centres for Disease Control and Prevention reports that 23 per cent of high school students said they recently smoked marijuana, while 18 per cent said they puffed cigarettes. The survey asked teens about a variety of risky behaviours.

For decades, the number of teens who smoke has been on the decline. Marijuana has fluctuated, and recently rose. At times, pot and cigarette smoking were at the same level, but last year marked the first time marijuana use was clearly greater.

An earlier survey by the University of Michigan also found that pot smoking was higher. A Michigan expert said teens today apparently see marijuana as less dangerous than cigarettes.

Of 'stolen' baby names

Etiquette. What if someone got to your "special" one first?

SHAWNA COHEN
Mommyish.com

Just days after Blue Ivy entered the world, proud parents Beyoncé and Jay-Z trademarked their little girl's name. But guess what? You can still name your little bundle Blue Ivy if your heart desires (just don't go using that name on your line of hipster onesies).

Baby names are a free for all. Nobody owns the rights to a baby name — not your cubicle mate, your BFF or your very own sister who had the name "Zoe" picked out from birth. And it's about time people stopped accusing others of "stealing" their baby names. This isn't high school, people!

Recently, the Social Security Administration released its list of the top American baby names for 2011. As fascinating as the list itself is, some people are actually upset if their chosen baby name happens to have fallen on it. For example, the name Mason is in the No. 2 spot for boys — much to the dismay of parents who believe they personally invented/discovered that name (newsflash: you didn't!).

One Mommyish reader named Katie shared her own ridiculous baby name-stealing story. It goes like this: A girl in her daughter's class is named Isabelle. Isabelle's mom went nuts when a fellow mom named her second child Isla. She claims to have invented the name Isabelle and she felt that Isla was just a bit too similar. So Isabelle's mom flipped out at Isla's poor mom and accused her of stealing the name she magically created by combining Izzy and Belle. (Isabelle's mom, if you happen to be reading this: Get a grip, lady!)

Also this month, the New York Times devoted space to this very issue. One reader "Meghan" from St. Louis — wrote in with the following:

"I'm expecting my first child next month. We're naming our son Benjamin, a family name filled with meaning. I told my colleagues months ago. My assistant is also expecting her first child. She recently announced that she will name her son Benjamin, too. I approached her privately and told her I was upset. She thought I was being unreasonable, and told me she chose the name after me because she thought it was cute. What should I do?"

Meghan, too, was told to get a grip — thank God! (It was even recommended that she consider the name Nenjabim as an alternative, which cracked me up.)

My point is this: If you have an "original" baby name picked out, don't share it in advance. If you do share it in advance, don't be upset if someone else uses it.

Another point: If you hear a name that you like, go ahead and use it. Who cares if there are two Jadens in the same playgroup? Chances are there will be two more in little Jaden's classroom, anyway, and another seven at your next door neighbour's birthday party.

Is a Brave princess really groundbreaking?

LINDSAY CROSS
Mommyish.com

Who is excited about Pixar's newest movie Brave? Let's all raise our hands.

This will be the first time a Pixar movie has a sole female protagonist. It centres on a girl who happens to be a princess, but doesn't really act like one. The main character, Merida, is more interested in archery than in finding a prince.

As I've been eagerly watching the previews for Brave, I took it for granted that my headstrong daughter would be excited about the movie as well. This is a little girl who throws Batman-themed birthday parties. Of course she's going to love a princess who competes in a tournament for her own hand in marriage.

Except then I went and showed my daughter the trailers. "Ehh...Let's go swimming, Momma."

That was it. That was her response. I'm not going to pretend that I wasn't a little let down. "Did you see she shoots a bow and arrow?" I prompted.

I realize that I shouldn't push my daughter to like certain things, especially not movies or television. I should probably take pride in the fact that what I'm sure is an enormously expensive marketing campaign hasn't swayed my little girl's opinion. But I really want my daughter to love this awesome character who seems to be strong and fearless.

I guess Brave is a big deal for all the women who realize that they grew up with kind of crummy princesses. We're the ones who, as adults, keep demanding more progressive characters for young girls. Our kids really don't understand yet just why complacent princesses rescued by their one true love might set a bad example. To my daughter, who's always been told that girls could rescue themselves, this movie isn't all that groundbreaking.

Either that, or Disney's marketing team has lost its touch.

Brave, or maybe no big deal at all. DISNEY

A distinctly savoury and stylish take on cheesecake

Top these little cakes with smoked salmon with a sprig of fresh dill; pear with caramelized onions; caviar and sour cream; prosciutto-wrapped fig or; black olive tapenade.

1. Line a 23-cm (9-inch) pan with foil, letting it hang over the edge for easy removal of cheesecake; set aside.

2. Crust: In a bowl, combine graham cracker crumbs, melted butter, sugar and pepper. Press into pan. Bake in 150 C (300 F) oven for 10 minutes. Let cool completely.

3. Filling: Using a food processor, blend cream cheese, sugar, egg, egg yolk, sour cream, lemon juice, salt and pepper. Process until all ingredients are fully incorporated and batter is free of lumps, about 1 minute. Pulse in walnuts and chives.

4. Pour into pan and spread evenly over crust. Bake for 20 minutes or until centre is firm. Do not over-bake. Let cool completely in pan, cover and place in refrigerator overnight.

Freshen up your laundry list

DIY. Homemade detergent is a cheap and chemical-free alternative for your laundry

BEN KNIGHT
Metro Canada

In the market for an additive-free, fragrance-free laundry detergent that's also much, much cheaper than the brand you're using now?

You probably can't buy it. But you can make it yourself — at home.

And it's easy!

Using just three simple ingredients, you can mix a batch in less time than it takes to go to the store and buy a commercial brand.

"The first ingredient is a bar of soap," says Matt Jabs, co-founder of the website diyNatural.com, which is packed with innovative, inexpensive homemade cleaning solutions.

"It can really be any kind of soap, but a lot of people use either Ivory or maybe Castile soap."

"Then you have to grate the bar of soap," adds Matt's wife and site co-founder Betsy Jabs. "We always recommend you use the finest cheese grater, so the soap particles are small and not floating around in the laundry."

Add a cup of Borax, a cup of washing soda, mix thoroughly, and you're ready to do laundry.

"A lot of people will substitute baking soda for washing soda," Matt notes. "Washing soda is really good if you have hard water, because it's a water softener. But if you already have soft water, you're better off using baking soda."

The savings are impressive. This simple concoction cleans your clothes for about a nickel a load. The same amount of commercial detergent costs four times as much — around 20 cents.

"It's one of the things in our households that I think people don't give a second thought to," Betsy says. "They don't consider the chemicals and the harmful things that might be in the laundry detergent, that eventually end up on our skin every day. We only use ingredients that we know are safe, and aren't going to coat our clothes with any harmful chemicals."

If you've just purchased a modern high-efficiency washing machine, this homemade laundry soap is actually ideal.

"Consumers have been duped big-time that they need some kind of more expensive, high-efficiency detergent for HE machines," says Matt. "All they are is low-suds. Our recipe creates very little suds."

"People really do have to give this a chance," Betsy concludes. "It doesn't take a lot of time, and if you don't like the result, those ingredients can still be used elsewhere in the house."

QUEEN OF GREEN
Lindsay Coulter
green@metronews.ca

Is there such thing as green hotels? And if so how can I find one?
Dan of Toronto

Indeed, there are green hotels!

Many work to conserve resources like energy and water — by installing everything from energy-efficient lighting to low-flow shower heads. Other green hotels tackle waste and pollution with food waste composting, in-room recycling and using eco-friendly cleaning products.

One option is to search the Green Key Eco-Rating Program website at greenkeyglobal.com. They rate hotels and resorts in Canada, the U.S. and internationally on environmental performance

Top Canadian Hotels (topcanadianhotels.com) also allows hotels to self-select as "green" by submitting an evaluation of their environmental performance — energy conservation, pollution prevention — to receive green leafs (one to five). However, it doesn't appear that the actions committed by the hotels are verified by another third party, or Top Canadian Hotels for that matter.

A leader in the green hotel movement has been the Fairmont Hotels & Resorts. In 1990, the company launched a Green Hotel Partnership Program to minimize its properties' carbon footprint. In Vancouver, the Fairmont Waterfront raises 500,000 honeybees on its rooftop and maintains a beautiful herb garden (excellent bee food), not to mention serving Ocean Wise seafood, organic wines and much more. They believe they can minimize their environmental impact while offering guests an outstanding experience! And why not?

A simple Internet search using "green hotel" and your destination city will likely reveal a few excellent choices. Be prepared to ask about what exactly makes them "green."

Not accepted: Fear of the flat envelope

There's life after that letter. Recover and recharge after post-secondary rejection

MELISSA REBER
Metro News

As a high school senior I remember anxiously awaiting word of my acceptance to my top university picks. That day came when I had all the envelopes in my hand — three stuffed to the brim with good news, and one pathetically thin with rejection.

I was offered a spot in another program, but this was still not what I was hoping for when I applied. As an 18-year-old who was not quite sure what I wanted to do with my life, the three acceptance letters left me with more choices then I knew what to do with, but there was a small part of me that felt the sting of not being 'good enough' for that one university.

Receiving a rejection letter to one, or a few, of your university applications is not uncommon.

With the number of applicants rising each year the competition is fierce if you want to secure a spot at one of the top universities in Canada.

So what happens when you receive that rejection letter and your dreams of walking across the graduation stage at (insert school name here) are dashed?

Allison Singh, author of Getting Over Not Getting In: A College Rejection Guide, offers advice on getting past the feelings of inadequacy and upset:

Be proud of what you've accomplished, no matter what answer the envelope produces. ISTOCK

Remember that rejection will not hold you back

"But entering college full of bitterness and self-doubt will," says Singh,

"Research shows that these days it does not matter where students attend college, or at least not as much as they might think. Employers value skills and internship experience more than the name on a diploma. Success is up to the individual."

Respect your feelings

"Sometimes we minimize the sting of rejection or condescendingly tell students to just brush it off. This is unfair," Singh says. "In many ways, we have set students up for this by making the college admissions process the central focus of high school. I begin by reminding students that rejection is not an indicator of their ability or future success. They should be proud of what they accomplished in high school, regardless of where they end up."

Move forward

Singh suggests students to take another look at the schools that did accept them. "Visit the schools, talk to students. If they keep looking back at the school that said no, they will miss out on all of the opportunities at the school that said yes."

Resumé reality

"Employers value skills and internship experience more than the name on a diploma. Success is up to the individual."

Wellness at work.
Facing a health scare with her son, Angela Shim took matters into her own hands

THE IN-CREDIBILITY FACTOR
Teresa Kruze
life@metronews.ca

Sometimes the most amazing things in life come in the smallest packages.

Angela Shim was working in a bank when she gave birth prematurely to her son.

When he was diagnosed with severe health problems, she was told by the doctors that there was nothing more they could do.

“He was eight years old and looked like a dehydrated old man covered in gauze. I made a decision at that time I was going to do whatever it took to find a solution.”

Angela went to workshops, web seminars and naturopaths; then she went to work on her son.

“I saw him heal completely. We got him off puffers and medications and we saw a new person.”

Angela’s son is now a healthy 19-year-old.

Angela Shim, co-founder of the Whole Child Network. PROVIDED

She left the bank and created a new career helping other parents heal their children through food nutrition and energy management.

“I feel very blessed with what I’ve experienced and it has been an awakening process. Create your wellness bank account. And make sure you invest more than you withdraw.”

Canadian Peliwo finishes second in junior competition

Canadian Filip Peliwo came up short in his second straight junior Grand Slam final, suffering a 6-1, 6-4 loss to Belgian Kimmer Coppejans on Sunday at the French Open.

The 18-year-old from Vancouver smashed his racket in frustration after his opponent claimed the title on a first match point. Peliwo had put the Belgian under pressure with three break points in the final game, but Coppejans managed the save them all — the third with an ace. THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

Bolt OK after early morning 'fender bender'

Usain Bolt was involved in a minor car crash shortly before dawn Sunday in his Caribbean homeland of Jamaica but was not hurt, according to the publicist for the world's fastest man.

Carole Beckford said the three-time Olympic champion was returning from a party with friends in the early hours Sunday when he was involved in a "fender bender" in Jamaica's capital of Kingston. THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

Kings refocus with time running out

NHL. Doughty says club has tuned out distractions after losing two straight to Devils

The cellphones are going off and the blinds are going down. The Los Angeles Kings believe the best way to close out this Stanley Cup is to completely ignore the growing madness around them.

When they had a chance to make history and lift the trophy at Staples Center in Game 4, the requests for tickets and demands on their time went through the roof.

As a result, they may have been guilty of taking their eyes off the prize, something they've vowed not do when they get a third shot at knocking off the New Jersey Devils in Game 6 on Monday.

"We don't want any distractions," said defenceman Drew Doughty. "I think a lot of us before Game 4 were distracted with family members and friends, the cup coming in the building. A lot of things we have to put aside. Family always comes first for everyone, but at this point of the year the team has to come first.

"We're a family in the room and on the ice."

It was a refreshing piece of honesty from Doughty, who provided the best view behind the curtains as the Kings family convened at their practice facility Sunday for a meeting.

This is the first time all playoffs they've been part of a series that reached Game 6. The margin for error is getting slimmer and they're clearly looking to use the missed opportunities in this series for extra motivation.

"We realize a lot of us didn't play at our potential in Game 4," said Doughty. "We were nervous, worried about other things. All of us in the room were kind of frustrated that we were thinking about things ahead of time. (Coach) Darryl (Sutter) made sure that wasn't going to happen this time." THE CANADIAN PRESS

"The only way to really look at it in the series is the first goal."

Kings coach Darryl Sutter. A key factor to watch in Game 6 is who scores first. In a series where goals have been extremely tough to come by, the team who takes the first lead has won five in a row.

One for the ages

Significant history will be made no matter who raises the cup.

- Los Angeles is after its first title in 45 years while the Devils are seeking to become the first team since the 1942 Maple Leafs to erase a 3-0 deficit in the final.

Blue Jays' bats come to life in Atlanta

After watching the Blue Jays score a combined five runs in two losses to the Braves, John Farrell fretted about his team's inability to "bunch some hits together."

The Blue Jays came through with an impressive solution in the final game of the series.

Brett Lawrie and Colby Rasmus each homered and drove in three runs and Toronto rallied from an early four-run deficit to beat Atlanta 12-4 on Sunday.

The Blue Jays set a season high with 18 hits as they ended a three-game losing streak. The offensive outburst, which started with a six-run fifth inning, came after Toronto was held to one hit in four scoreless innings by Braves rookie Julio Teheran.

"The way things started out, it wasn't looking real promising," Farrell said. "We were able to string a number of hits together.... We were able to string together not only the six runs but it continued on through the middle and latter part of the game."

The Braves' six-game winning streak ended even though they led 4-0 after three innings. Toronto's Ricky Romero lasted only four innings, giving up eight hits and four runs, three of which were earned.

A key to the Jays' six-run fifth was Farrell's decision to replace Romero with pinch-hitter Yan Gomes, whose single drove in the first run. It was the first of five straight run-scoring hits. THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

Euro 2012. Spaniards allow opening tally, but battle back to earn draw in opener

For Spain, it was a bit of a stumble. For Italy, it was a bit of a reprieve.

Beginning its bid for a third straight major title, the Spanish rallied to earn a 1-1 draw Sunday against Italy, which entered this year's European Championship amid another match-fixing scandal.

Antonio Di Natale put Italy in front after an excellent setup from Andrea Pirlo in the 61st minute, but Cesc Fabregas equalized for the defending champions three minutes later by finishing off a dazzling display of Spain's passing game.

"Being the favourite now is complicated, but in the end we found the character," Fabregas said.

Spain, which followed up its Euro 2008 victory with the 2010 World Cup title, dominated the match for long stretches but struggled to finish at times, while Italy relied on dangerous counterattacks.

The draw ended a 14-match winning streak for Spain in competitive play.

Still, it could have been worse.

"I don't leave here frustrated because the effort we made to win this game was tremendous," Spain coach Vicente del Bosque said. "It was a good game, a different kind of game." THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

Group C. Croatia beats Ireland 3-1 in opener

Playing in a difficult group with Spain and Italy, it's Croatia at the top.

The Croats took advantage of a frail Ireland defence to win their opening match at the European Championship, getting two goals from Mario Mandzukic in a 3-1 victory Sunday night at rainy Municipal Stadium.

"I still can't believe what we just did. It was a fantastic victory," Mandzukic said. "We knew it would be a tough match, but we responded excellently and we achieved a great victory."

Croatia leads Group C with three points, while Spain and Italy each have one point after their 1-1 draw in Gdansk, Poland. Ireland, which is playing at a major tournament for the first time in 10 years, is last. The Croats next face Italy on Thursday.

"Probably one victory will be enough to go to the quarter-finals," Croatia coach Slaven Bilic said.

Croatia took the lead in the third minute when Mandzukic looped a header past a diving Shay Given, but Ireland equalized in the 19th when Sean St. Ledger headed in Aiden McGeady's free kick from the left.

Nikica Jelavic put Croatia back in front in the 43rd minute, scoring his first goal in a competitive match since he made his international debut in 2009.

"The second goal was clearly offside," Ireland coach Giovanni Trapattoni said.

Mandzukic added the third in the 48th after his header from Ivan Perisic's cross bounced off the post and into the net off Given's head. THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

James and Durant set to go head-to-head

NBA. Dominant Heat star pitted against Thunder's offensive juggernaut in finals

Dwyane Wade, left, and LeBron James celebrate their win over Boston in Game 7 of the Eastern Conference finals in Miami on Saturday. MIKE EHRMANN/GETTY IMAGES FILE

Several weeks before this season even started, LeBron James and Kevin Durant were competing against each other.

Hell Week, they called it, a four-day series of gruelling workouts.

Starting Tuesday, they'll meet again. They'll call that the NBA finals.

Neither was playing at the level they are now when James invited Durant to work out with him during the NBA lockout in his hometown of Akron, Ohio. Now as James tries to win his first ring, fittingly, it's Durant in his way.

"It's only right. It's only right," James said. "We look forward to the challenge. It's going to be a big test for us."

James played at a rarely seen level in the Eastern Conference finals against the Boston Celtics. According to STATS LLC, James became the first player since Shaquille O'Neal in the 2000 finals to have six 30-point games in a playoff series. In the one contest where James didn't score 30, he finished with 29 in Game 4, fouling out in overtime.

"He was absolutely brilliant this series, and we all know it," Heat coach Erik Spoelstra said. "He's playing at a historic level during the playoffs, driving us with his will."

There's little argument that James and Durant have been the stars of the post-season. James is averaging 30.8 points, 9.6 rebounds and 5.1 assists, while Durant is at 27.8 points, 7.9 rebounds and 4.2 assists. But while Durant is celebrated for what he's doing as a 23-year-old on the rise, James gets the constant reminder of how he's a 27-year-old without a championship despite moving to Miami.

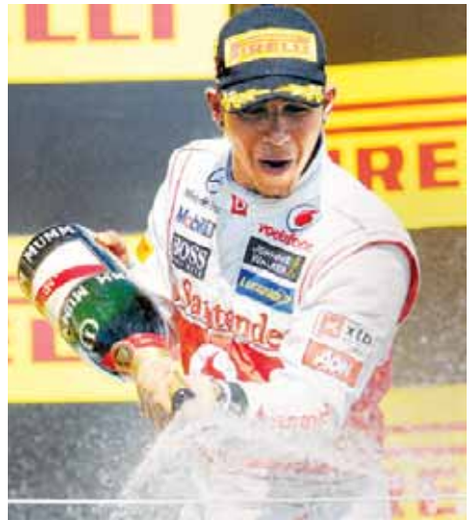
LeBron James averaged 33.6 points and 11 rebounds on 53 per cent shooting during the Heat's seven-game series against the Celtics.



Hamilton makes it three at Canadian Grand Prix

Lewis Hamilton celebrates winning the Canadian Grand Prix for the third time on Sunday in Montreal. Hamilton roared past defending F1 champion Sebastian Vettel's Red Bull and Fernando Alonso's Ferrari late in the 70-lap race to take the checkered flag with a 2.5-second gap over Romain Grosjean's Lotus. Horoscope

Aries | March 21 - April 20. This is a good day for socializing, for spending quality time with your friends.

Taurus | April 21 - May 21. Enjoy yourself today but make sure you know your limits and make sure you stay within them.

Gemini | May 22 - June 20. Jupiter moves into your sign today, signaling the start of a more fortunate phase, but don't expect too much.

Cancer | June 21 - July 22. You are under no obligation to work your fingers to the bone, nor are you obliged to rescue a friend or work colleague from a situation that is entirely of their own making.

Leo | July 23 - Aug. 22. The moment you start to believe that nothing can possibly go wrong is often the moment when you are in the most danger.

Virgo | Aug. 23 - Sept. 22. The more you want something to happen today the more likely it is you will overreach yourself and make a serious mistake.

Libra | Sept. 23 - Oct. 22. You will be on the move in some fashion today. Where you go and what you do is entirely up to you but, for best results, try to make it some place that inspires you mentally, emotionally and spiritually too.

Scorpio | Oct. 23 - Nov. 21. You will be in a dreamy mood today but you need to be serious too, especially about money issues which involve other people.

Sagittarius | Nov. 22 - Dec. 21. Partners and colleagues will grant any favor you ask of them today — so ask away!

Capricorn | Dec. 22 - Jan 20. Resist the urge to rush things, especially on the work front where you won't do your reputation much good if you do too much too quickly and make silly mistakes.

Aquarius | Jan. 21 - Feb 18. Jupiter, planet of good fortune, moves in your favour today but that does not mean you can do as you please.

Pisces | Feb. 19 - March 20. Be wary of people who try to baffle you by introducing facts and figures that have no relevance to what you are working on.
